“FETO’s COUP ATTEMPT: A TIMELINE” was printed in Istanbul on August 5, 2016.
A group within the Turkish army associated with the Fetullah Terrorist Organization (FETO) attempted a coup in Turkey on July 15, which claimed the lives of 240 people. The attempt failed spectacularly when the Turkish nation showed an exemplary resistance in support of the Republic and democracy.

The Fetullah Terrorist Organization (FETO), which is led by U.S.-based preacher Fetullah Gulen, emerged in the 1970s as a movement providing educational services. FETO claims to be a provider of education, and its members, governed by a strong infrastructure, promote themselves abroad as volunteers of education and peace. However, when we look at the organization, they conceal their real identities in Turkey and other relevant countries as they settle into critical state institutions like the army, judiciary, security and intelligence units, and bureaucracy with a variety of identities (leftist, rightist, liberal, pious). This situation reveals the actual aim of the organization, which presents itself as the “Hizmet (Service) Movement” in the countries it operates.

WHAT IS FETO?

It infiltrates strategic institutions by seemingly functioning as a school, educational/cultural center, professional organization or nongovernmental organization and with the aim of seizing control of the state. Under their deviant religious ideology, FETO considers it legitimate to engage in all kinds of self-defensive deception, conspiracy, trap and illegal activities to achieve its objectives. With years of confidential training and dissuasion activities, members of the terrorist organization have gained a level of professionalism beyond the comprehension of ordinary people. Its members operate with a radical “devotion” and see themselves as the “chosen ones”; they switch identities and commit all types of illegal acts, including murder if needed.

WHAT HAPPENED ON JULY 15?

On July 15, 2016, a FETO group nesting within the army attempted a coup through force using Turkish fighter jets, tanks and helicopters. The attacks were directly aimed at killing unarmed innocent people. Tanks ploughed over citizens on the streets who were protesting against the coup. FETO bombed the Presidential Palace, parliament, police and public buildings. People in the streets who protested against the coup in Ankara and Istanbul were shot and bombed by fighter jets and choppers; they also tried to assassinate President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. During the coup attempt a total of 179 civilians, 62 policemen and 5 soldiers martyred.

WHAT IS ITS AIM?

At around 10 p.m. on Friday July 15, a group of officers within the Turkish army associated with the Fetullah Terrorist Organization (FETO) launched a coup attempt at the General Staff Headquarters that was suppressed after almost 22 hours. According to information compiled by Anadolu Agency (AA) reporters, FETO’s putsch attempt was decisively put down at 8:02 p.m. on July 16.

Below is a timeline of FETO’s attempted coup and its aftermath (all in Turkish local time).
Soldiers take control of state broadcaster TRT and the General Staff HQ in Ankara as troops seize Istanbul’s Bogazici (Bosphorus) and Fatih Sultan Mehmet bridges linking Asia and Europe.

The undersecretary of the Prime Ministry sets up a coordination center at the Prime Ministry in Ankara.
An explosion is heard at the Police Special Operations Center in the Golbasi district in southern Ankara.

Prime Minister Binali Yildirim, speaking by phone to television channels, describes unfolding events as an “insurrection”. “This will not be tolerated. Those involved will pay the heaviest price,” he says, adding that the perpetrators are a rogue faction within the army.
Chief of General Staff Gen. Hulusi Akar held hostage by pro-coup soldiers.

Security sources say the coup attempt is being conducted by officers linked to the Fetullah Terrorist Organization (FETO) led by U.S.-based preacher Fetullah Gulen.

President Recep Tayyip Erdogan leaves Marmaris, a district in Turkey’s southwest, for Ataturk International Airport in Istanbul.

Military helicopters open fire on National Intelligence Organization (MIT) Headquarters; MIT forces return fire.
TRT news anchor forced to read a declaration by pro-coup soldiers claiming they had taken control of the nation as the “Committee of Peace at Home”. Presidential sources make it clear the Turkish Armed Forces did not release the declaration, saying: “It is a fake declaration.” Shortly afterwards, satellite communications agency TURKSAT suspends TRT’s transmissions.

President Erdogan addresses the country via mobile telephone, urging the people to “take to the streets” to resist the coup attempt and defend democracy. He says those responsible for the uprising against the national will would receive “the appropriate response”, whether they were a minority group within the Turkish Armed Forces or in other state institutions.
A military helicopter bombs a facility belonging to Turkish satellite agency TURKSAT in Ankara’s Golbasi district.

Turkish citizens take to the streets to protest the coup attempt after call of President Erdogan as well as the calls for unity aired from mosque minarets in 81 provinces upon the instruction of Turkey’s Presidency of Religious Affairs.

Citizens and police neutralize five soldiers, including a senior military officer, who had tried to seize control.

13 soldiers, including three senior officers, are detained while attempting to take over the Presidential Complex in Ankara.

Parliament is bombed, injuring a number of police officers and staff and damaging the parliament building.

Parliament is bombed again; speaker and MPs take cover in assembly's bomb shelter.
PM Yıldırım, speaking live again by phone to private broadcaster NTV, compares those attacking institutions with jets to members of a terror organization. He describes such acts as “unbecoming of any military officer or soldier serving under the glorious flag of our Armed Forces.”

TRT resumes broadcasting and FETO-affiliated soldiers who tried to seize control of the public broadcaster are detained.
PM Yıldırım warns that all military aircraft flying over Ankara -- especially over critical areas such as the National Intelligence Organization HQ, Parliament, Prime Ministry or Presidency -- will be downed.

Sounds of gunfire are heard again from Turkish General Staff headquarters.

President Erdoğan arrives in Istanbul.

Ankara Chief Public Prosecutor’s Office orders the arrest of pro-coup soldiers.
It is revealed that FETO-affiliated military officers set up a group on mobile-phone application WhatsApp on July 15 through which they coordinated the coup attempt, ordered attacks on civilians with messages like “Crush, burn, hang tough”, and arranged escape plans once the coup attempt had been put down.

COUP-PLOTTERS’ WHATSAPP CHATS REVEALED

Security forces uncovered some of the social media correspondence between the pro-coup soldiers linked to the Fetullah Terrorist Organization (FETO). As the chats show, pro-coup soldiers were given orders to open fire on civilians who were resisting the coup attempt. Excerpts from the conversation follow:

The order to open fire on crowds

- Lt. Col. Muzaffer Duzenli: I repeat. Fire on crowds to disperse them.
- Col. Muslum Kaya: They’re bringing the construction equipment to AKOM [the Istanbul Greater Municipality’s Disaster Coordination Center]. Fellow soldiers are opening fire
- Maj. Mehmet Karabekir: As someone in the field, I’m opening fire on the crowd. I’m waiting. Use [firearms] over and over again in a controlled way. Around 10 to 15 people are rubbed out. No such thing as losing initiative
- Maj. Muammer Aygar: There’s an intense clash in Kuleli [Istanbul]. We’re opening fire on the crowd
- Col. Ahmet Baykal: We have ammunition and our morale is high

“The coup manifesto was read out on TRT, keep going”

- Lt. Col. Mustafa Duzenli: Fellows, thank God many targets in Ankara and Istanbul were seized. The coup manifesto was read out on [state broadcaster] TRT. Keep going the same way. Whoever resists our campaign will get a firm response. This is the order. Brothers, the units that are no longer needed in their current position should be relocated to other points
- Lt. Col. Ugur Coskun: Urgent support is needed in Sakarya [near Istanbul]. People are trying to interfere with the tanks
- Maj. Mehmet Karabekir: Randomly open fire at Sabiha Gokcen [Airport], there’s a problem there.
- Maj. Muammer Aygar: We shot four people resisting in Cengelkoy [Istanbul]. No problem
- Col. Sadik Cebeci: There are around 3,000 to 4,000 people at the [ruling Justice and Development] AK Party’s Istanbul headquarters. Support is needed
- Lt. Col. Mustafa Duzenli: The people that gather, the police that stand against the military, they should get a heavy response from tanks. Lt. Sadik, where’s the place?

The “crush, burn, give no quarter” order

- Lt. Col. Ugur Coskun: The people crushed all our staff and handed them in to the police at the Governor’s Office. Police are trying to hold back the crowd, but it’s too hard
- Maj. Mehmet Karabekir: Crush, burn, give no quarter
- Lt. Col. Ugur Coskun: If we open fire, we can hit three or five of them, but we can’t stop them from entering
- Col. Zeki Atmaca: Transmissions from the antennas at Camlica [Istanbul] should be cut off immediately
- Col. Uzay Sahin: Don’t get carried away, don’t leave your weapons
- Col. Sadik Cebeci: The private TV stations should be shut down.

“Can an offensive on the second bridge be considered?”

- Maj. Muammer Aygar: Can an aerial offensive on the second bridge [Fatih Sultan Mehmet Bridge] be considered?
- Col. Uzay Sahin: As long as our strength holds out, my friends
- Col. Muslum Kaya: There’s a battery problem for communication with Taksim [Istanbul]. Planes just opened fire three times. We don’t know where

EXTRADITION PROCESS OF TURKISH PRO-COUP SOLDIERS WHO FLED TO GREECE

The extradition process of eight Turkish military officers who fled to Greece in a military helicopter following the July 15 coup attempt could take up to a month, legal experts say.

THE PROCESS HAS THREE PHASES

1. The first involves a trial for illegal entry into Greece, which constitutes a criminal offense.

2. The second involves the asylum applications filed by the officers. If the applications are approved by the Greek authorities, then the extradition process will be halted.

3. The last step is extradition. Proceedings will be held before a regional court before being moved to the Greek Supreme Court, which will decide on the Turkish extradition request. The Turkish request will be considered within the framework of the European Convention on Extradition, to which both Turkey and Greece are parties.

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan speaks to CNN International’s Becky Anderson in a July 16 interview after the failure of the Fetullah Terrorist Organization’s attempted military coup.

Erdogan says captured coup soldiers are now revealing the source of their instructions. “One of those who took our chief-of-staff hostage even went so far as to say: ‘Let’s put you in touch with our opinion leader, Fetullah Gulen’.”

Kılıçdaroğlu said “I had some concerns and I expressed my concerns to Mr. Prime Minister. Especially I said the violent acts against rank and files who only listened to orders were not right and expressed that those acts needed to be investigated. It is our duty to resolve tension in society through cooperation,” Kılıçdaroğlu told reporters during the press conference.

“The [Turkish] society went through a serious trauma. We need to return to normal urgently,” Kılıçdaroğlu added, as Yıldırım thanked him for the show of support.
PM Yıldırım (at right) and leader of the Nationalist Movement Party (MHP), Devlet Bahceli (at left), hold a joint press conference held the same day.

Bahceli said Turkey was rid of a calamity with the coup attempt.

“There is relief in our society. Life goes on normally. As the MHP, we have once again expressed to Mr. Prime Minister that we will be with the efforts the government with our 40 deputies and the support we get from our people to remove all coup elements and make evaluations which will prevent such attempts in the future,” Bahceli said.
Virtually all of the Turkish national media voices opposition to the coup bid and takes the side of democracy.

TURKISH TOP COMMANDER AIDE ADMITS GULEN ‘LOYALTY’

"I am a member of the parallel state, or FETO. I have served this community for years voluntarily. I have obeyed the orders and instructions of the big brothers exactly," he confessed

Lieutenant Colonel Levent Turkkan, former aide of Chief of General Staff Hulusi Akar

● "MAIN PERPETRATOR"
  Lieutenant Colonel Levent Turkkan, former aide of Chief of Turkey's General Staff Hulusi Akar, admitted to having links with FETO, which he said was the “main perpetrator” of coup attempt

● "BIG BROTHERS"
  "I continued to see my big brothers while in military school.

● "THEY GAVE ME EXAM ANSWERS"
  "I took the military school entrance exam in 1989. I was a bright student and was sure I would pass the exams by my own efforts. But the night before the exam, my ‘big brothers’ [FETO handlers] gave me the answers to the exam"

● “EAVESDROPPING”
  "I spied on [former] Chief of Staff Necdet Ozel all the time. I put a recording device in his room in the morning and took it back in the evening.”

WHILE UNDER INTERROGATION, TURKKAN ALSO PROVIDED INFORMATION ON HOW THE GULEN MOVEMENT WAS ORGANIZED INSIDE THE TURKISH MILITARY

“I believe 60-70 percent of those people who have been accepted inside the armed forces since the 1990s are linked to Gulen”
TURKISH TOP COMMANDER’S AIDE ADMITS GULEN ‘LOYALTY’

“I was spying on [former] Chief of Staff Necdet Ozel all the time. I put a recording device in his room in the morning and took it back in the evening hours,” Turkkan said. “The device has its own capacity and could wiretap for 10-15 hours.”

During the questioning by prosecutors, Turkkan admitted he received the device from a person who claimed to be working at Turk Telecom, Turkey’s leading telecommunications company.

“[He] ordered me to eavesdrop on the general [Necdet Ozel]. He told me, ‘We will tap him for information purposes; nothing is going to happen.’ I did not question him and took the device,” he said.

Turkkan said he had at least two recording devices, which he returned once their capacity was full.

Turkkan also admitted that Major Mehmet Akkurt -- whom Turkkan claimed was a member of the Gulen movement who he had worked closely with -- had spied on high-ranking generals, including Chief of Staff Hulusi Akar.

He did not specify the exact time when they tapped Akar.

“I think the movement has been spying on those generals in order to know what is going on inside the armed forces,” Turkkan confessed.

Once General Hulusi Akar was promoted to Chief of Staff, Turkkan said he stopped wire-tapping.

During the interrogation, Turkkan also provided information on how the Gulen movement was organized inside the Turkish military.

“I believe 60-70 percent of those people who have been accepted inside the armed forces since the 1990s are Gulen-linked people,” he said.

Turkkan said he received information about the military coup on July 14 at around 10:00 a.m. local time from Staff Colonel Orhan Yikilkan, who served as an adviser to the Chief of Staff.

“Yikilkan told me the President, the Prime Minister, the Chief of Staff and the command- ers-in-chief would be arrested... [and that the military coup] would be staged at 03:00 am on early Saturday [July 16],” Turkkan said.

Turkkan said he visited his brother to check whether he was aware of the military takeover, but failed to see him.

He told the prosecution that he met with other members of the movement in his brother's home.

“When I asked them, they angrily told me, ‘How do you know? Who told you this? Did you tell anyone?’... They told me to keep quiet,” Turkkan said.

After the thwarted coup attempt, Turkkan said he surrendered to military officials who turned him in to the police.

Turkkan said he felt regret for taking part in the violent coup.

“Until the coup, I thought the Gulen movement was acting for God’s sake and Gulen himself had a spiritual identity,” Turkkan said.

“Until today, I never thought the Gulen movement was traitorous. But now, I [have] realized what they really are. They [the members of FETO] are bloodthirsty. I have never seen Fetullah Gulen, but he is the same,” he said.

“I feel regret not only for taking part in this [coup attempt], but also for becoming a member of the Fetullah Gulen movement,” he added.

According to the Turkish Constitution, a state of emergency can be declared for a maximum period of six months when serious incidents of violence that threaten the free democratic environment—or the basic rights and freedoms established by the constitution—are present, or when the public order comes under threat due to acts of violence.

When is a state of emergency declared? The parliament may alter the duration of the state of emergency and extend the period for a maximum of four months each time at the request of the cabinet, or it may lift it completely. The cabinet, appointed by the President, can issue decrees that apply to areas where the state of emergency requires it to do so. These decrees are published in the official gazette and submitted to the parliament for approval.

WHAT IS THE STATE OF EMERGENCY?

State of emergency and martial law do not mean the same thing. “The purpose of the state of emergency is to most effectively and swiftly take steps necessary to eliminate the threat to democracy in our country, the rule of law, and the rights and freedom of our citizens,” President Erdogan said. During the state of emergency, any restriction on fundamental rights and freedoms will be out of the question.

State of emergency and martial law do not mean the same thing. In the state of emergency, authority remains with the civilian administration while under martial law it is given to the military. President Erdogan announced that the Turkish Armed Forces would remain under the command of civilian governors and would continue to carry out their usual duties during the state of emergency. He also underlined that during the state of emergency any restriction on fundamental rights and freedoms would be out of the question.

Does the state of emergency mean martial law? According to the State of Emergency Law, carrying or transferring any kind of weapons or ammunition can be banned. In addition, keeping, preparing, making or transferring any kind of armament, bomb, explosive or radioactive material can be banned. Moreover, any kind of device or tool that could be used to make such materials can be seized.

In the wake of the failed coup bid, President Erdogan announced a nationwide three-month state of emergency.

Speaking at the Presidential Complex in Ankara after back-to-back National Security Council and Cabinet meetings -- the first since the coup attempt -- Erdogan said the state of emergency was being declared under Article 120 of the Turkish Constitution.

Under Article 120, in the event of serious indications of widespread acts of violence aimed at the destruction of the free democratic order, a state of emergency may be declared in one or more regions -- or throughout the country -- for a period not exceeding six months.

“The purpose of the state of emergency is to most effectively and swiftly take the steps necessary to eliminate the threat to democracy in our country, the rule of law, and the rights and freedom of our citizens,” Erdogan said.

The president said the move was aimed at “eliminating the coup-plotting terrorist group” in reference to the Fetullah Terrorist Organization (FETO).

Speaking words of reassurance to the Turkish people, the president said: “Never be worried. There is nothing to worry about.”

He said it was “out of the question” for the armed forces to seize power. “Quite the contrary, the authority and will of the [civilian] leaders will be strengthened.”

“We will never compromise on democracy,” he added.

Erdogan blasted ratings agency Standard & Poor’s downgrade of Turkey’s main sovereign rating in the wake of the failed coup, saying the move was politically motivated.

“Why are you even interested in Turkey?” he asked. “Don’t ever try to mess with us.”
In 2013, S&P failed to reach a rating agreement with the Turkish Treasury. Since then, it has only issued an unpaid, unsolicited assessment.

The Treasury has deals with other international rating agencies, including Fitch and Moody’s, both of which maintained the country’s investment-grade rating following the failed coup attempt.

The president said Turkey was still committed to moving ahead with infrastructure projects and would continue its program of economic reform.

Erdogan said that S&P’s assessment did not reflect the realities of the Turkish economy, which grew by 4.8 percent in the first quarter of 2016 compared to the same period last year.

The president went on to vow that Turkey would maintain fiscal discipline.

“Turkey will continue its economic reforms without any interruption....There is no liquidity problem,” he said.

After declaring the state of emergency, Erdogan later addressed the crowds assembled in public squares across the country via video conferencing.

Erdogan first addressed the public in the central Anatolian city of Konya before connecting with the southeastern city of Sanliurfa online from Ankara.

He said the state of emergency was not martial law, stressing the move was intended to “purge terror members from state institutions and better practice democracy”.

“The state of emergency is a process of empowering governors. The Turkish Armed Forces will serve the governors in the provinces and work with them. There is no limitation on fundamental rights and freedoms during a state of emergency. We guarantee this,” he added.

Prime Minister Binali Yildirim tweeted: “This [state of emergency] decision will not effect the daily life of our people; rather, it is intended to enhance the proper and swift functioning of state mechanisms.”

Yildirim also reiterated his call to citizens to not leave the streets.

Deputy Prime Minister Numan Kurtulmus, for his part, told reporters in Ankara: “The conditions of the state of emergency will only be used for fighting the [FETO-led] parallel structure.”

In addition, a National Security Council and Cabinet statement asserted: “Our body has once again confirmed its commitment to democracy, fundamental rights and freedoms, and the rule of law. The steps to be taken later were also discussed.”

The statement added that the state of emergency had been declared in order to protect “citizens’ rights and freedoms, our democracy, and the rule of law”.

Foreign Minister Mevlut Cavusoglu tweeted: “The state of emergency is definitely not opposed to democracy, the law, or freedoms; it is aimed at protecting and reinforcing these values.”

Speaking to Anadolu Agency, Interior Minister Efkan Ala said the decision would not have any negative effects on the everyday lives of Turkey’s citizens.

“No one need worry about it,” he said. “The state of emergency will accelerate Turkey’s fight against terrorism.”
